WIDOWS' DRESS.

Fabrics That Are Suitable and How They Are Used.

When a woman is bereft of her husband the sense of loss is so great that it overshadows everything else, and she is apt to allow a dressmaker or a too well meaning friend, but one who may be lacking in good judgment and a sense of the eternal fitness of things, to choose her mourning attire for her. In the olden times women often borrowed the first garb significant of their sorrow from some one who had recently been bereft until such time as their own garments could be made or purchased with the care that such expensive costumes require. This gave them time to do far more with their money than they could otherwise have done.

Precedent has established now that the fine eudora cloth, which is half wool and half silk, should be the proper material for the first gown for all who can afford it. It wears so well and is so suitable for other requirements after the days of mourning are past that in the end it is cheaper than the other goods for the purpose. It also admits of crape bands and crape trimming better than any kind of goods. Silk warp Henrietta, drap d'ete and eudora are the proper materials for first mourning gowns, the drap d'ete being for elderly women. Dull surfaced broadcloth may also be used, and good cashmere, and there is mohair material woven so that it resembles crape.

Crape Still Supreme.

The lavishness with which the rich and heavy English crape, the ancient of days, Courtland, is applied to waists, sleeves and skirts would seem wasteful were it done for any other purpose than to solace the living with the idea that they are thus paying respect to the dead. Waists to gowns are made in the latest styles of the day and are covered with rouleaux, overlays, bands and folds, with revers, collars and ruffles. The waists are almost to be classed among the works of art in view of the many ways of applying the trimming and its beauty.

For first mourning for a widow severe simplicity of lines so far as the skirt is concerned is the rule and is considered the best form. This should be quite long and sweeping and with the crape laid smoothly over the skirt, generally nearly to the hips. No material except eudora, drap d'ete or silk warp Henrietta can bear this kind of trimming, but it is superb and dignified. Some have the crape reach only to the knees, headed by rouleaux or milliner's folds. None but the heavy English crape will answer for this trimming, though for later mourning the lighter qualities will do for veils and other requirements. None of the others has sufficient body.

The Mourning Jacket.

For a widow the coat is of the prevailing style, but severely plain, though of the finest material and jet black. There are blue blacks and jet blacks. The jet black only is suitable for mourning. No ornamentation should be put on the coat save crape covered buttons or some close crape trimming. Furs should be black, though seal is permitted because it looks black. The gloves should be black, and handkerchiefs should have the narrowest borderings, scarcely more than a line. Shoes are of dull kid and buttoned. Jewelry is of dull jet, and very little is worn—perhaps a small pin to fasten the collar. Long jet chains are used for watches, or they are fastened with a jet bar pin. The widow may wear white lisse ruffles at the neck or lawn collars and cuffs to match. The small white lace cap and veil are rarely seen in this country, but are almost obligatory abroad. They are very becoming.

The close bonnet with the very long and heavy veil is to be worn at least three months, when a hat may take its place, with a lighter veil for ordinary occasions. One like the illustration has crape roses and a short veil. Silk mull or nun's veiling may be worn for all occasions except church after three months. The long veils have deep hems and reach to the feet.

OLIVE HARPER.

There are hundreds of men and women who have not eaten a hearty meal for years. Their stomachs have "gone back" on them. In such cases the Bitters will be found very helpful. It strengthens the stomach and cures Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Poor Appetite, Heartburn, Bloating Cramps or Kidney Ills.
